KAGERA Co-operative Union (Fair Trade Coffee Beans)

*“Thanks to Fair Trade, three of my six children can go to the international school.”
Hashiri Katakweba proudly said that.*

Kagera Co-operative Union (KCU) unites 125 village cooperatives of small coffee growers with around 67,000 members and each family cultivates on an average 1.6 acres. Kagera is quite isolated from the rest of Tanzania and one of the poorest areas of the country. Roads are badly maintained. There is a lack of electricity and a poor water infrastructure. Farmers' main source of income comes from producing coffee for export. With Fair Trade, the small-scale farmers have more incomes; community schools and health centers are being built. KCU also guarantees the sale of coffee, arranges transportation and provides trainings on quality control and organic production. Some farmers received farmer-to-farmer training, acting as contact persons to pass on the training they had received to 20 other farmers. The organization also let the farmers get the fertilizers and equipment in an easier and cheaper way, for example, they purchased a grading machine, which was to improving the quality of the coffee. Fair trade relationships bring other benefits as well. Farmers are now more knowledgeable about the problems they are facing, such as unfair trading practices. The farmers are now having a better life and farming ability, which means good quality coffee can be produced in a sustainable way.
