UNlimited Institute (UNi) is a student organisation based in Hong Kong, for building sustainable communities in developing countries through youth engagement, founded by passionate university students from the University of Hong Kong and Hong Kong Polytechnic University. UNi is recognized as "Commitment of Action" by ex-president Bill Clinton in Clinton Global Initiative University 2014. We are passionate in social community engagement, as much as to apply our knowledge and experience learnt in university to create sustainable communities in rural areas in developing countries.

Our work of community building includes both software and hardware empowerment. By software we refer to education from basic language to advanced practical skills such as computer usage, design technology and electrical engineering. As for hardware, we refer to the construction of community facilities such as schools and community centers, which foster community interactive communication and activities, improving their relations.

In long run, UNi dedicates to empower villages with self-sustainable mentality and skills. It is our ultimate goal and vision to build every sustainable community as a "model" which can an insight to the others'.
